Down to Calico. (Continued from first page.)

Next morning he was at his desk early to finish his long letter to Elsie. His hand trembled, partly from the agitation of last night's experience, and partly from dread of the day's work in the court-room.

"How did you get through the other day?" Dick asked, after a few moments of silence. "Pretty well. After you left, the old man came down, and through his influence the judge was tolerably easy on me."

"Did you plead not guilty?" "No. I fessed up. I took your advice. When I came to study the case, that seemed to be the best thing I could do."

"I thought so," said Dick. "And now, Dick," Fred continued, grasping the opportunity, "I have come to ask a favor of you. Mr. Morton has promised to give me my old place, and I mean to turn over a new leaf. I know how badly I have been doing, and I am going to quit it."

Every body is busy, ditching and plowing for corn. Land here ranges in price from $15 to $75 per acre. Our crops look well. Climate, healthy, soil, good, prospects, flattering.

"I must go," said he, "Court opens at nine o'clock, and it is now ten minutes after." "Yes, I had forgotten. You are to assist Smucker in the Marley case, I believe. Don't let me detain you."

"Yes, I can," Fred replied and they separated, Dick hurrying down to the court-room, and Fred going up toward the letter-box on the corner. Dick sat beside the sleepy Smucker, whose table was stacked with law books.

"The work of empanelling a jury was the first thing, and the motley venire was already seated in the box. In a few minutes Judge Gordon appeared and the restless assemblage was called to order."

"He," he thought, "a love-letter I reckon," and quick as a flash he saw his chance for revenge against the dissembling lawyer. Fred went into a saloon, walked back to a "free-lunch" table and sitting down, tore open the envelope and spread the contents out before him.

"To his Elsie, my dear, you thought it was your Dick Fessenden that was married, did you? And so you shall still think for want of this precious bit of information. Ha! ha! Mr. Fessenden, you were unable to oblige me—wonder if I can oblige you!"
